The Story of Trafalgar's Signature Cortina Leather Products

Trafalgar's famous Cortina Leather has a long and rich history. Trafalgar is very particular about this type of leather due to its quality and preparation which ensures that its character has many unique properties your customer will want to know about.

1) Quality: Quality is the cornerstone of Cortina Leather. Cortina leather comes specifically from the shoulder area of the hide. It is a very limited and specific section of the cow, but it is the one place the contrasting highs and lows of the fat wrinkles show the most depth and richness of color. Trafalgar's Cortina Leather also comes from free-roaming cows from the Belgium countryside where barbwire is never used. This precaution eliminates the inevitable scarring one sees on the hides of all other leather used in the US. Paired with Trafalgar's strict "Quality Control System and Standards" your Trafalgar customers are guaranteed the best product on the market.

2) Eco-Friendly: All Trafalgar Leather is Vegetable Tanned. This not only means a more durable, longer lasting finish; but means this luxury collection is one of the first leather accessories lines to be entirely bio-degradable and eco-friendly. Usually, leather is tanned with man-made chemicals that, although doing the job faster, are hazardous to our environment in disposal and cause the products to eventually contribute to the ever growing environmental waste management problem. With Trafalgar's process of vegetable tanning, although the procedure requires considerably more time and effort; we take pride in knowing all of our products are bio-degradable, eco-friendly, and thus better.

3) Character: Because of the nature of the Cortina tanning process, Trafalgar Cortina Leather is able to be drum-dyed and aniline finished. Both of these steps are often overlooked in the leather accessories business because of expense and time; but Trafalgar feels these steps are necessary to ensure only the best quality. Drum-dying and the subsequent aniline finishing process is equivalent to staining a piece of wood. The long process of drum-dying (a process which can take up to 2 months) and aniline finishing ensures two things. The first is that the color fully penetrates the leather resulting in a beautiful finish that shows the contrasting highs and lows of the natural grain. The second is that the leather will age beautifully. Unlike poorly stained leather, where only the top layer of the leather will wear with age, because of the depth of the color and stain penetration, all of Trafalgar's Cortina Leather products will maintain the rich highlighting of natural grain, for a lifetime.
